the Industry for Photographic Products was hampered by difficulties in procuring some basic materials, especially since the interzonal trade had come to a stop. No substitute could, for instance, be procured for madural and madurit special glues for films (Nassfestleime), so far delivered by the Leopold Casella in Frankfurt/Main-Fechenheim. Baryta white for photographic papers was also scarce due in East Germany. the East German industry did not succeed in producing sensitizers of satisfactory quality, i.e. dye stuffs increasing light sensitivity.

25X1A

Comment. Experiments by the Stickstoffabrik Piesteritz to produce special glues for films had failed.
